> [Buffalo Ropublican. Marshat Si Arnaud.

The late commander-in-chief of the allied troops was a man of unquestioned courage and of considerable ability and astuteness. But his early career was any thing but illustrious.

Jean Jacques Leroy-for the name of St. Arnaud was one afterwards assumed-was born in the year 1801, and entered the French army as a sous-Heutenant in the Guards in 1816. Charges were brought against him of fraud, upon which he was experied from the service.

After many shifts and degradations, he became clerk to a street letter writer, a class who gain considerable custom in Paris from the poorer and illiterate classes. While thus employed, he was arrested for larceny. E. Z. BROWN.] The evidence produced against him is still extant. It is a pawnbroker's ticket, bearing testimony that "Madame Decremie, pawnbroker, 17, Rue Neuve des Pettis Champs, Paris, advanced eighteen francs on the 7th of January, 1824, upon a plaid woolen shawl, two female linen chemises, and two of cotton, to L. de St. Arnaud."

Perhaps in consequence of this he fled from Paris to London, where he was for some time known as the partner of a femule swindler who passed herself off upon unsuspecting tradesmen as the Baroness Pillay, and a lady of high position and large forfune. The police turning more of their attentiou to M. Leroy and the Baroness than was agreeable, they resolved to decamp to Paris again. They did so, but not until the Leroy de St. Arnaud, as he now called himself, succeeded by Legitimist influence in getting restored to his rank in the army. It was said by his enemies that it was on condition of his acting as a spy. However Dealer in Drugs and Medicines, north side of Public Square, Ravenna, Ohio. in the betrayal of the Duchess de Berri-an act which brought so much opprobrium upon him among his brother officers that he took service with the Foreign Legion in Algiers. He is accused of having been so addicted to gambling, that he was on the point of being cashiered. But the commanding general, Bulphreries, interposed and pardoned him.

Then comes a part of his history that tends somewhat to relieve these dark shades. His courage and activity led to his being selected for various services, and he was rewarded by a captain's commission. Other promotions followed, and he returned to France in 1851 as General St. Arnaud .-One of his military achievements previous, however, was marked by the extreme of barbarity, the burning and suffocation of five hundred Algerines, men, women and children, in a cavern.

He became very early an adherent of Louis Napoleon. It is currently reported that neither of them dared to trust the other, and that St. Arnaud always retained in his possession the order to bombard Paris, written in Napoleon's own hand, in order, if need be, to use it against his master, who, on the other hand, preserved the judicial records of St. Arnaud's early delinquencies, ready to bring them up in judgment. He knew and respected his military abilities, however, or He would not have advanced him to the important post of Commander-in-Chief of the French army of the East. Death interposed, trembling steps, she went to the Bank and asked for her money. But she was coldly refused the little all which she had laid up to support her declining years. This poor old creature had bore the heats of summer and the blasts of winter to accumulate this sum, and now she finds it swept out of her reach, and squandered in luxurious living, or sunk in copper stock speculation. How much is the heartless swindler better than the highway robbe Leader.
